Tips

Three Essential Tips to Ensure Smooth Sailing This Boating Season

Pack Smart

Life jackets

Life jackets are a must. Both state and federal law requires a Type I, II or III personal flotation device on all boats. Vessels greater than 16 feet in length must also have a Type IV, or throwable, personal flotation device. All children 12 and under are required to wear a life jacket whenever a boat is in motion.

Fire extinguishers

Don't get burned by negligence. State law requires all boats equipped with a petroleum product consuming device (engine, lantern, stove, etc.) to have a handheld fire extinguisher on board. It may seem silly to worry about fire when you're surrounded by so much water, but fire claims are no laughing matter.

Signaling devices

Make sure you can be heard. Boats 16 feet or longer are required by law to have a signaling device capable of producing an audible blast for at least two seconds and that can be heard for a half-mile. Boats 26 feet or longer must have a device that is audible for a mile, and vessels 40 feet or longer must have one with an audible range of 1.5 miles.

Navigation lights

Guarantee you can be seen. Any vessel operating on the water between sunset and sunrise must display proper navigation lights. Sidelights are required on the bow (front) of the boat – red on the port (left), green on the starboard (right) – and an all-around white light in the stern (rear). This helps give boaters an indication of the size and speed of other boats on the water when visibility is limited and indicates if a boat is in a meeting, crossing or overtaking position.

Tips

Three Essential Tips to Ensure Smooth Sailing This Boating Season

Think Before You Drink

No drinking while on the water, whether you're driving or just enjoying the cruise as a passenger. It is additionally important to remember that operating a boat while under the influence of alcohol or drugs is not only illegal in all states and a violation of federal law, but it is also extremely dangerous. The National Safe Boating Council (NSBC) says that a boater with a blood alcohol content of .08 (equivalent to a 180-lb. male consuming five beers in one hour) is 10 times more likely to die in a boating accident than a boater with a zero blood alcohol level.

Know the Ways of the Waterways

Lakes and rivers don't have painted lanes like our roads, so it's important to know the ways of the waterways. Collisions account for more boating claims than any other reason. Learning the right of way in the three most common boating situations — meeting, overtaking, and crossing — can help you avoid an accident.

- When meeting another boat head-on, keep to the right as if you were driving on a road.
- When overtaking another boat (or passing from behind) go around. Keep in mind that the boat in front of you may not be aware of your presence.
- When crossing paths with another boat, remember that the boat on the right has the right of way. The boat on the left must give way to the stand-on vessel.

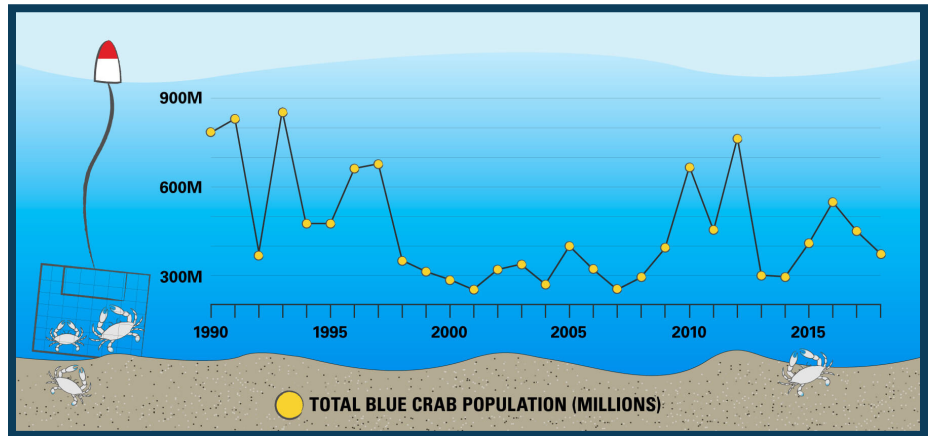

Report

Blue Crabs

For most of the last two decades, the total number of blue crabs in the Chesapeake Bay has lingered below the long-term average. Because blue crabs are so important to the region's ecosystem and economy, both Maryland and Virginia monitor the blue crab population through an annual Winter Dredge Survey.

The crabs that are collected at each of the survey's 1,500 sampling sites are measured, weighed, sexed and aged, and the data is used to estimate the number of young crabs entering the population, the number of female crabs old enough to spawn and the total number of harvestable crabs in the Bay.

371 Million*

The total number of blue crabs in the Chesapeake Bay.

According to data from the Winter Dredge Survey, an estimated 371 million blue crabs lived in the Bay in 2018. While this marks an 18 percent decrease from the previous year and a 33 percent decrease from the year before that, experts called the population healthy, resilient and sustainable. The decrease observed between 2017 and 2018 has been attributed to a drop in the number of adult blue crabs, as the number of juvenile crabs in the Bay rose 34 percent during this time.

In the Chesapeake Bay Watershed Agreement, the Chesapeake Bay Program set a population target and an overfishing threshold for adult female blue crabs. In 2018, an estimated 147 million adult female blue crabs lived in the Bay, compared with 254 million in 2017. This number is above the 70 million overfishing threshold but below the 215 million target. This summer, experts will determine whether the blue crab stock is depleted and whether overfishing is occurring.

Blue crabs are vulnerable to pollution, habitat loss and harvest pressure. Water quality improvements, underwater grass restoration and proper harvest management will be critical to maintaining this valuable resource.

What You Can Do

To protect blue crabs, consider protecting underwater grasses, which offer young and molting adult crabs protection from predators. Boaters can follow posted speed limits and no-wake laws and steer clear of grasses growing in shallow waters.
